National Register of Historic Places Registration Form

This form is for use in nominating or requesting determinations for individual properties and districts. See instructions in How to Complete the National Register of Historic Places Registration Form (National Register Bulletin 16A). Complete each item by marking "x" in the appropriate box or by entering the information requested. If an item does not apply to the property being documented, enter "N/A" for "not applicable." For functions, architectural classification, materials, and areas of significance, enter only categories and subcategories from the instructions. Place additional entries and narrative items on continuation sheets (NPS Form 10-900a). Use a typewriter, word processor, or computer, to complete all items.

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Overview

Wesley Heights is an early twentieth century streetcar suburb of Charlotte, North Carolina. It is located approximately one mile northwest of "the square" (the intersection of Trade and Tryon Streets), which is commonly considered to be the center of town. Streets generally follow a grid pattern, with the principal streets running northeast to southwest. Although the neighborhood is easily accessed by industrial/commercial W. Morehead Street and Freedom Drive, the character of Wesley Heights is entirely residential. Interstate 77 skirts the eastern edge of the district, thereby providing a barrier between Wesley Heights and "uptown" Charlotte.

Originally farmland, the terrain of gently rolling hills is typical of the North Carolina Piedmont. Improvements were undoubtedly made during the early phase of development which probably altered the natural terrain somewhat. Nonetheless, the sloping topography remains evident on the landscape. Brick and cinderblock retaining walls, many of which are original, line the streetscapes throughout the neighborhood. Mature trees stand guard over the sidewalks and granite curbstones which edge the roadways.

Wesley Heights is an impressively coherent district. With the exception of houses removed for road building projects, and the destruction of the public school, very few buildings have been torn down. Virtually all of the non-contributing structures are infill construction on lots previously undeveloped. There are a total of 372 buildings, 335 (ninety percent) of which are contributing resources. Of the 372, there are two churches, 287 residences, eighty-two garages, and one backyard workshop. The residences can be further broken down into single-family houses (225) and multi-family dwellings (sixty-two). Multi-family dwellings are of three types: duplexes, quadriplexes (two-story, four-unit apartment buildings), and apartment buildings. There are seven apartment buildings, eleven quadriplexes and forty-four duplexes.

The neighborhood was first laid out in 1911. At least one house dates from this period, the George Wadsworth House at 400 S. Summit Avenue (no. 123). In 1920, the land (excepting the few lots already sold), was transferred to the Charlotte Investment Company, who re-drew the survey plat, improved the land and offered lots for sale in December of 1921. Initial sales were brisk, and houses were constructed beginning in 1922. The majority of resources were built between 1922 and the close of the decade. Most of the remaining houses date from the 1930s, with a scattering of homes built during the 1940s and later.

Integral to the layout of Wesley Heights was the proximity to rail lines. There was already a functioning streetcar line running up W. Trade Street and bordering the southeast corner of the tract. Additionally, the Piedmont and Northern Railroad had a track running directly through the center of the neighborhood. The Piedmont and Northern connected a string of textile mills in Mecklenburg and Gaston counties, but did not have a stop in Wesley Heights.

Lots are long and narrow--typical for an urban setting. Most lots are fifty-five feet wide and either 150 or 187 feet long. Virtually all of the houses are set back from the sidewalk, but two houses on Walnut Avenue (no. 166 and no. 234) were constructed on the extreme rear portions of their lots. Most of the lots have driveways and many have, or had, garages behind the houses. Functioning alleyways transect the rear lot lines in most of the older section (northeast of the former Piedmont and Northern Railroad tracks). Only nine dwellings face side streets, the rest face the principal northeast--southwest streets.

Architecture

Building materials are overwhelmingly wood and brick (veneer). Other types of masonry, namely stucco and stone trim, are seen on only a few buildings. The Wesley Heights Methodist Episcopal Church (now Greater Bethel A. M. E. Church) has marbled glass windows. Some modern replacement materials are also present, especially asbestos and vinyl siding.

The predominant architectural styles are Bungalow/Craftsman, Tudor Revival and Colonial Revival. While both churches and a handful of houses are architect designed, the majority were not. They were likely constructed following published or purchased plans. Several do not embody any overwhelming style characteristics and could be termed vernacular.

Architects and Builders in Wesley Heights

A few prominent Charlotte architects were known to have designed buildings in Wesley Heights. Louis Asbury drew the plans for both the Wadsworth House at 400 S. Summit Avenue (no. 123) and the Greater Bethel African Methodist Episcopal Church (formerly Wesley Heights Methodist Episcopal Church) at 201 Grandin Road (no. 10). The other church in the neighborhood, St. Mark's Baptist Church (formerly St. Andrew's Episcopal Church) at 615 Grandin Road (no. 61) was designed by William H. Peeps. Fred L. Bonfoey was a Charlotte architect who had established a reputation for designing bungalows, and is known to have drawn plans for houses in Dilworth, also worked in Wesley Heights. An example of his work can be seen in the Severs House at 321 Grandin Road (no. 30).

While there are a few houses that were designed by architects, the vast majority were erected by builders using what was listed on building permits as "private plans." These were either purchased or published plans which were then widely available at low cost. Scholars have pointed out that the cost of mechanical systems, which were considered mandatory by the 1920s, increased expenditures, and could be accountable for twenty-five percent, or more, of a building's total cost (Clark, p. 162; Wright, p. 168). Economies had to be found elsewhere. One such economy was in using stock plans rather than the services of an architect.

Twenty-two builders were listed in the 1920 Charlotte City Directory. In 1930, there were seventy-one. This represents a 323 percent increase in only a decade. Many of these names appear on building permits in Wesley Heights. Out of town builders, and builders not mentioned in the City Directories were also employed. Consequently, no one contractor dominated the market in Wesley Heights. Additionally, building permits were found which were signed either by a developer, or by the owner himself.

Whether architect-designed, or derived from a purchased plan, the bulk of the housing stock in Wesley Heights can be classified according to general style groups. They fall into three primary categories: Bungalow/Craftsman, Colonial Revival and Tudor Revival.

Bungalow/Craftsman

The most prevalent style, hallmarks of this style are broad, low-pitched roofs, vertical-light windows, porch supports that combine brick piers with wood posts or columns, and wide overhanging eaves accented by knee braces and exposed rafter ends. Houses with Bungalow and/or Craftsman detailing can be further broken down by type.

Front-gabled bungalows are one or one and one-half stories in height, and show their gable end to the street. Many are basic rectangular boxes. Others incorporate protruding bays or gabled extensions to the sides. All have porches. Different effects can be produced, depending on the size and orientation of the porch roof. A full-width front-gabled porch often mimics the roofline of the house and dominates the facade. Both the Cleveland House at 221 Grandin Road (no. 19) and the Goodman House at 420 Grandin Road (no. 43), have this effect. A full-width porch with a hipped roof, however, is clearly subordinate to the house. This can be seen on the Parker House at 400 Grandin Road (no. 33). Some plans called for a hip-roofed porch to wrap across a portion of the facade and down part of the side elevation. This arrangement helps ameliorate the angularity of the form and is found on the Abernethy House at 100 Grandin Road (no. 1).

Side-gabled bungalows are common also. Having the gable end perpendicular to the street, these houses often are dominated by massive full-width porches. The porches are either attached or engaged. The Taylor House at 401 Grandin Road (no. 34) is a particularly nice example of the type with an attached side-gabled porch. Both the house at 408 Walnut Avenue (no. 37) and the Miller House at 130 Grandin Road (no. 8) are so similar to the Taylor House, that they were probably all built following the same plan. Dormers are used to punctuate the solid surface of the roof.

Bungalows with combination roofs use both parallel and perpendicular ridgelines in the same roof structure. On this type, the house is front-gabled, but transected by a side-facing gable which covers the porch and a portion of the facade. The house at 325 Walnut Avenue (no. 169) is a clear illustration of this type. Some, like the Smith house at 209 S. Summit Avenue (no. 105), have partially recessed facades under the side-gabled roof.

Hipped bungalows are less prevalent. Most have roofs that extend out and incorporate the porch under the same roof structure. Some have dormers on the front or cross gables on the sides. Some good examples are the Todd House at 412 Grandin Road (no. 39), the Sherrad House at 316 S. Summit Avenue (no. 117), and the Lewis House at 420 Walnut Avenue (no. 179).

Bungalow/Craftsman detailing was also employed on duplexes in Wesley Heights. Several duplexes have front-gabled roofs and pairs of matching front-gabled porches. 308-10 S. Summit Avenue (no. 113) illustrates this in weatherboarded frame, and 712-14 Grandin Road (no. 77) is a similar structure in brick veneer. A variation with clipped gables is found in 309-11 Grandin Road (no. 24).

Colonial Revival

The Colonial Revival style was popular and long-lived throughout the nation during the early twentieth century. Hallmarks of the style include symmetrical facades, side-gabled roofs, end chimneys, and multi-paned sash windows. The most notable Colonial Revival style house in Wesley Heights is the two and one-half story Watt House at 214 Grandin Road (no. 16). It was built on a parcel spanning three lots and is shown on a 1921 plat. It was probably designed by an architect and is a fine example of the style. Other Colonial Revival houses include the Beatty-Oxner House at 704 Grandin Road (no. 73) and the Kistler House at 724 Grandin Road (no. 82).

Tudor Revival

While the grand, elaborate mansions that come to mind when one hears "Tudor Revival" are not present in Wesley Heights, a diluted version of the style was being built during the 1930s. Called "Period Cottages," these houses employ elements of the style such as front-facing cross gables, exterior front chimneys, and the absence of front porches. Most are brick veneer and all are one or one and one-half stories in height. Good examples of this style are the Goodman-Liston House at 416 Heathcliff Street (no. 88), the Coppala House at 620 Grandin Road (no. 64) and the house at 805 Walnut Avenue (no. 230).

This "Period Cottage" version of the Tudor Revival is also used on duplexes in Wesley Heights during the 1930s and early 1940s. Most of the duplexes built in this style have only one entrance on the facade. The entrance to the second unit is located off of the side, usually under a recessed corner porch. By doing this, the duplexes are made to resemble single-family dwellings. Good examples of this type are found at 624-26 Walnut Avenue (no. 211), 709-11 Walnut Avenue (no. 218), and 728-30 Woodruff Place (no. 273).

Multi-family Dwellings

Four-unit "Quadriplexes," which were popular in Charlotte during the 1920s and 1930s, are prevalent in Wesley Heights. They were probably successful because they allowed four units to be built on a standard size building lot, and yet harmonized with the character of the single-family residences lining the street. Although the decorative details were varied, they were all built following a standard format--two apartments on each of two floors. A common central entry serves all four units, and all four units have front porches or balconies. In some quadriplexes, the entry bays protrude out so they are flush with the porches. A trio of buildings like this were built on Walnut Avenue in 1928, at Nos. 524, 600 and 604 (Inventory nos. 198, 200 and 201).

There are two apartment buildings in Wesley Heights dating from the period of significance. The Bomar Apartments at 305 S. Summit Avenue (no. 112) were designed and built in 1928 by the Graham Brothers. It has elements of the Spanish Mission style, such as a tiled roof and round-arched openings, but is basically an extension of the quadriplex format. It has four units on each of two floors, with a center hallway in between. The Catawba Apartments at 107 Grandin Road (no. 2), designed by Louis Asbury, has twelve units inside (four on each of three floors) and a center hall, similar to the Bomar Apartments. The Catawba, however, lacks the porches and stylistic detailing of the Bomar Apartments.

Other

The Wadsworth House at 400 S. Summit Avenue (no. 123) was the first house built in Wesley Heights. It was designed by Louis Asbury and built in 1911, the same year that the first survey plat was drawn. Albeit a late usage of the grammar, the Wadsworth House exhibits elements of the Shingle Style vocabulary. Most commanding is the use of shingles as exterior cladding. The square solid massing, hipped roof with hipped dormers, and multi-paned windows are all suggestive of the style. It was, and remains, the showpiece of the neighborhood.

Across 2nd Street, the Robinson-Means House at 326 S. Summit Avenue (no. 122) is the only Four Square-style house in the neighborhood.

Integrity

While alterations are inevitable over time, the integrity of historic fabric in Wesley Heights is very good. Common alterations include the application of vinyl siding, the substitution of wrought-iron porch supports for the original wood members, and the enclosing of porches. In a few cases, windows have been replaced. Generally, the present condition of the buildings is very good, good or fair. Several garages however, are actively deteriorating. Occupancy rates remain high, as this is still a desirable place to live. The present condition of the neighborhood is not unlike its original appearance. The scale, setting, style and materials all remain largely unchanged.

INVENTORY LIST

The inventory list is arranged alphabetically by street name, and then numerically within each street, beginning with the lowest number. Grandin Road is listed first, followed by Heathcliff Street, Lela Avenue, S. Summit Avenue, Walnut Street, and Woodruff Place. The numbered streets, West 2nd Street, West 4th Street, and the West 4th Street Extension are found at the end of the inventory. The inventory number is keyed to the accompanying sketch map.

Each inventory entry contains the following components:

No.: This is the numerical numbering system. Buildings are arranged alphabetically by street and then numerically, in order, beginning with the lowest street number. Outbuildings are numbered with the number of the house followed by the letter a. For example, No. 88 is the house and No. 88a is the garage.

C/NC: This indicates whether the building is deemed to be contributing to district or non-contributing.

St. #: The street address of the building. Outbuildings carry the same number as the main house.

Date: The date of construction is approximate, and was assigned by noting the first year the property appeared in the City Directories. Unless a separate building permit was found, garages are assumed to have been built at the same time as the houses.

Description: The name of the property is listed, followed by a brief description which mentions the major features of the building. If no historic name was determined, the property is listed by type (i.e., house or duplex).

234	C	815	c. 1934	House. Set far back on the lot, this one-story frame dwelling appears to be tiny. Inside, however, there are four rooms, a bath and a shed-roofed addition. It has a three-bay facade with two entry doors and a single window bay. Porch shields the two entry bays. Interior chimney. Asbestos siding.
234a	C	815	c. 1934	Garage. Frame one-car garage with shed extension.
235	NC	816	1950s	Non-contributing, brick-veneered four-unit apartment building with gable end facing the street.
236	C	817-19	c. 1938	Duplex. One-story brick-veneered duplex that resembles a single-family dwelling. Facade is marked by two front-facing cross gables. One shields the left bay, which holds the entry into #817. Entry to #819 is on the south elevation. Interior chimney. 6/1 sash windows.
237	C	820	c. 1932	Giles House. Handsomely-proportioned one and one-half story brick-veneered house hints of both bungalow and Colonial Revival styles. Salient characteristics are the coordinating tripartite windows in dormer and cross gable over porch. Symmetrical three-bay facade. 6/6 sash windows.
237a	C	820	c. 1932	Garage. Frame two-car garage with glazed doors.
238	C	821	c. 1937	House. Simple one-story side-gabled brick-veneered house dominated by the front-facing porch gable. Upheld by square brick piers, it shields two of the three facade bays. Center entry has a glazing pattern similar to the 6/1 sash windows.

239	C	824	c. 1933	Fulk House. Single-story brick-veneered Period Cottage with side-gabled roof. Predominant feature is front-facing gable over two-bay porch which is held up by square brick piers terminating in arches spanning each opening. Asymmetrical three-bay facade. 6/6 sash windows.
239a	C	824	c. 1933	Garage. Frame one-car garage.
240	C	828	c. 1928	Nivens House. A simple, one-story frame house, the predominant feature is the gabled portico which is supported by Tuscan columns and shields the center bay of the facade. Symmetrical three-bay facade. The center entry has glazed front door and is accompanied by paired 6/1 sash windows.
240a	C	828	c. 1928	Garage. Frame two-car garage with hipped roof.
241	C	900	c. 1928	Lindsey House. One and one-half story frame house with side-gabled roof. Protruding front-facing gable of porch is visually dominant. Tuscan columns. Symmetrical three-bay facade. Rear ell. Gabled dormer in rear. 6/1 sash windows.

245	C	608-10	c. 1941	Duplex. The salient characteristic of this two-story brick-veneered duplex is the exterior front chimney which divides the building into two halves. Each half has a window end bay and the entry in the inner bay with a classically-inspired door surround. 6/6 sash windows.
246	NC	609	c. 1950	House. Wrapped in asphalt siding, this one-story frame dwelling resembles its original appearance only in form. The body of the house has a low hipped roof with cross gables extending out to the front and south side. Interior chimney. 6/6 sash windows.
247	C	612-14	c. 1941	Duplex. One of the few Dutch Colonial style houses in the neighborhood. The salient feature is the front exterior chimney, in the center of the four-bay facade. Entry to #614 is on the facade, while the entry to #612 is on the north side elevation under gabled portico. 6/6 sash windows.
247a	C	612-14	c. 1941	Garage. Frame two-car garage.
248	C	615	c. 1941	House. Simple one-story brick-veneered house with no overwhelming stylistic features. Side-gabled roof with small cross gable over front entry, which is in center of symmetrical three-bay facade. Gabled extension to north appears to be original.
249	C	616	c. 1941	Durham House. One and one-half story brick-veneered house has three-bay facade and side-gabled roof pierced by two gabled dormers and an interior chimney. A screened porch (altered) runs almost the entire width of the house and obscures the facade.
250	NC	617-19	c. 1949	Duplex. One-story brick-veneered duplex with side-gabled roof. Visually dominant cross gable covers projecting north window bay. Entry for #619 is on the facade, while entry for #617 is on the side elevation.

251	C	618	c. 1940	Leary House. The salient characteristic of this one and one-half story brick-veneered dwelling is the asymmetrical facade. Four bays span the facade, while three gabled dormers and an interior chimney pierce the roof. The unadorned entry is in the center left (south) bay. 8/8 sash windows on facade.
252	C	620-22	c. 1942	Duplex. One-story, side-gabled, brick-veneered duplex. The focus of the four-bay facade is the front-facing cross gable over the two left (south) bays, shielding the entry to #622. The entry for #620 is around the corner on the north elevation and opens onto a side porch constructed of a projecting gable and wrought-iron supports. Interior chimney. 6/6 sash windows.
253	NC	621-23	c. 1949	Duplex. One-story brick-veneered duplex with side-gabled roof. Visually dominant cross gable covers projecting north window bay. Entry for #623 is on the facade, while entry for #621 is on the side elevation.
254	NC	625	1950s	House. This one-story brick-veneered box is a simple form broken only by the recessed entry porch in the northeast corner. It covers only one bay of the facade and uses wrought-iron supports to hold up the corner of the roof.
255	C	628	c. 1940	House. Broad 8/8 sash windows punctuate the facade of this vaguely Colonial Revival two-story brick-veneered house. The symmetrical facade, regular fenestration, exterior end chimney and quarter-round gable windows all suggest the style.
256	C	629	c. 1941	House. Built following a traditional form, only the front exterior chimney reveals the post-depression construction date of this one-story frame house. The main body has a side-gabled roof, but the front-facing cross gable over the south bay predominates. 6/6 sash windows.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Summary

Wesley Heights is one of several early twentieth-century suburban developments ringing the city of Charlotte, North Carolina. Like the earlier neighborhoods of Dilworth, Plaza Midwood, and North Charlotte, Wesley Heights is a definable residential community development. Plans for creating a suburban development on a tract of Wadsworth family farmland were made as early as 1911. The neighborhood began to take shape in that year with the erection of the large Wadsworth house at 400 S. Summit Avenue (no. 123). The majority of houses were built during the 1920s, following an aggressive marketing campaign by the developer. In the absence of established planning practices, the developers were able to influence how the neighborhood was to look by using restrictive deed covenants. This assured that a certain unity was achieved within the neighborhood, even though each lot was developed separately. Although it was accessible from two separate streetcar lines, Wesley Heights is notable in that its residents were as dependent on the automobile for transportation as on the electric trolley. Wesley Heights is eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C because it encompasses an impressively coherent and largely intact collection of dwellings dating from the first decades of the twentieth century. Primarily Bungalow/Craftsman and Tudor Revival styles, the architecture reflects local and national trends in middle class housing during the period of significance, 1911-1945. The majority of houses are one story high, and all but one are wood frame. Many are brick veneered on the exterior, and gabled roofs are prevalent. There are a large number of multiple family residences, especially duplexes and quadriplexes. This helped fulfill the housing needs of singles and new residents to the area, as reflected by the tremendous growth in population between 1900 (18,000) and 1930 (83,000). Both one and two stories in height, the multi-family dwellings blend into the streetscape with ease. Most of the houses in Wesley Heights were built from plans without using the services of an architect, and therefore fall into the popular building tradition. A few prominent local architects were known to have worked in Wesley Heights, though. Louis Asbury drew the plans for the Wadsworth house (no. 123) and former Wesley Heights Methodist Episcopal Church (no. 11), both neighborhood showpieces. William Peeps, Fred L. Bonfoey and B. W. Roberts all designed houses in the neighborhood.

Historical Background and Community Development Context

Charlotte has a tradition of suburban development dating back to the late nineteenth century. The earliest suburban development, Dilworth, was established in 1891 at the end of the first electric streetcar line in the city. Plaza Midwood and North Charlotte grew up after 1903. Dilworth was expanded in 1911, the same year that neighboring Myers Park was laid out. Washington Heights, an African-American neighborhood, was founded in 1913. Further east, the five subdivisions that are now called the Elizabeth neighborhood were planned in consecutive sections beginning in 1891, and continuing through 1900, 1904 and 1915.

The 1915 Rosemont section of the Elizabeth neighborhood brought together C. B. Bryant, an investor, and E. C. Griffith, a developer. At one time, they both owned a piece of the Rosemont development (Hanchett, pp. 20-21; Black, pp. 8.7-8.8) and apparently chose to again do business together in Wesley Heights. They are both listed on the 1920 deed of trust when the property which was to become Wesley Heights was transferred to the Charlotte Investment Company (Mecklenburg County Deed Book 422, p. 131).

The property which was to become Wesley Heights was farmland during the nineteenth century. It belonged to John W. Wadsworth (1835-1895), who owned a livery stable and was a contractor for the first horsedrawn streetcar system in Charlotte. On this land, he raised Holstein cattle on what was called the "J. W. Wadsworth Model Farm" (Alexander, p. 7). In 1895, he died and left his property to his widow, four daughters and four living sons. At some point, the Wadsworth Land Company was formed, and plans were made to subdivide the parcel. A survey plat was drawn up in 1911 for the section that lies between the Piedmont and Northern Railroad tracks and the junction of W. Trade Street and Tuckaseegee Road. The new neighborhood was to be called Wesley Park. Whether lots were ever offered for public sale from this plan is unknown. What is known, however, is that a son and a daughter chose parcels for themselves. George Price Wadsworth (1879-1930) hired Charlotte architect Louis Asbury to design his spacious home which was built at 400 S. Summit Avenue (no. 123) in 1911. Louise Patton, a daughter, received three lots at 214 Grandin Road (no. 16) where a two and one-half story Colonial Revival style house was later erected. It is likely that she also employed the services of an architect. Both of these houses are indicated on a later survey plat, which was published in the newspaper.

The Wadsworth Land Company was either unsuccessful or did not actively pursue the development of Wesley Park. In January of 1920, the land was transferred to the Charlotte Investment Company for $200,000. The debt was payable in the form of twenty bonds of $10,000 each, the first three of which came due on January 1, 1922. In the intervening years, the Charlotte Investment Company redrew the survey plat, laid out the lots, and added improvements, such as sidewalks and public utilities. In redrawing the plat, lots facing the Piedmont and Northern Interurban Railroad tracks, and Lakewood Avenue, which straddled the tracks, were realigned to face the principal streets--Walnut Avenue, S. Summit Avenue and Grandin Road. Otherwise, the layout of the 1911 plat was retained and the vision for Wesley Heights was reborn.

Lot sales began in Wesley Heights on December 7, 1921. The event was marked by an advertisement in the Charlotte Observer encouraging prospective purchasers to "Put Your Savings To Work--Get Ready For The Building Boom--Select A Lot In Wesley Heights." As an incentive, a twenty-five percent discount was offered on the first fifty lots sold. Payment terms were available--ten percent down, twenty percent due by January 1, 1922, and the "remainder on terms to suit the purchaser." For cash buyers, an additional discount of approximately three percent was mentioned. (Charlotte Observer, December 7, 1921)

The sale was an immediate success. A mere five days later, another ad appeared in the newspaper boasting that thirty-two lots had already been sold "to the best people of Charlotte. It stands to reason that such a record would have been impossible unless WESLEY HEIGHTS appealed to their own good judgement as a section in which to live."

This ad further commented that each lot was already improved with "water, sewer, sidewalks, telephone and lighting facilities," and that Grandin Road and Summit Avenue were scheduled for paving during the coming year. (Charlotte Observer, December 11, 1921)

Home construction was encouraged. E. C. Griffith Company offered to finance fifty percent of the combined cost of a house and lot for those who would build within two years. How many homes were built under these conditions is not known, but the City Directories for 1923/24 (the first year streets in Wesley Heights were mentioned) showed three addresses on Grandin Road, seven on Summit Avenue and nine on Walnut Avenue.

After the initial flush of activity, lot sales and construction proceeded steadily. Encouraged by success, the Charlotte Investment Company had plans drawn up for the tract lying in between the Piedmont and Northern Railroad tracks and West Morehead Street. This extended the principal streets from one end of the neighborhood to the other. Unlike the earlier section, the later half does not include cross streets or alleyways. Lot sales and home-building activity began in this section without haste.

Two churches and a public school were erected during the 1920s. The Wesley Heights Graded School (128-32 S. Summit Avenue) was constructed around 1925, probably lending further incitement for families with children to settle in the neighborhood. The Wesley Heights Methodist Episcopal Church (no. 11) and St. Andrew's Episcopal Church (no. 61) were built in 1928 and 1929, respectively. The presence of the churches and the school helped form a true community, not merely a residential enclave.

Multi-family housing concepts matured in Wesley Heights during this time. Fifty-seven of the 333 contributing residences are either duplexes, quadriplexes or apartment buildings. This is a direct reflection of the need for accommodations for those who were single, newly-transplanted residents, or otherwise not ready for home ownership. This was a strong trend nationally, as well as throughout Charlotte, as is evinced by population statistics (18,091 in 1900; 34,014 in 1910; 46,338 in 1920; and 82,675 in 1930). In Wesley Heights, multi-family dwellings were a planned and integral part of the neighborhood, not merely an afterthought as in other areas.

Because there were no established planning practices in Charlotte at the time, the developers of Wesley Heights resorted to using restrictive covenants in order to influence the final form of the neighborhood. These covenants were added to the deeds and regulated such things as setback, fencing, and even the cost of the structure to be built. By doing this, certain minimum standards were maintained, and a degree of cohesion was assured.

The success of Wesley Heights during the 1920s reflects both a nationwide trend toward suburban development during the late -nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries. More importantly, however, is the fact that Wesley Heights was the first of such developments in Charlotte in which residents relied equally on the private automobile as on public transportation. Previous suburbs in Charlotte were dependent on the presence of the streetcar lines for their appeal and success. Wesley Heights on the other hand, while it was located close to the trolley line, could have succeeded without it. Wesley Heights represents the dawn of the commuter suburb in Charlotte, which would prove to be a pervasive development pattern throughout the twentieth century.

By 1921, when the the campaign to sell building lots there began, many people in Charlotte were driving automobiles. There was an auto show in the city in the same year, 1921, where various makes of automobiles and accessories were exhibited (Blythe and Brockman, p. 435). In 1925, there were 182 separate businesses with listings in the City Directories under the general heading "Automotive." That included dealers, financiers, garages, filling stations and more, but clearly indicates that motoring was commonplace. Statistics bear this out on a national level. Kenneth T. Jackson, writing in Crabgrass Frontier points out that automobile registrations rose 150 percent between 1920 and 1930. He further states that "the decade after the end of World War I was the first in which the road and the car had full impact" (Jackson, p. 175).

Whether Wesley Heights would have been quite as successful without its proximity to the Piedmont and Northern Interurban tracks and W. Trade Street Trolley line is arguable. It is evident, however, by counting the number of garages shown on the 1929 Sanborn map that the automobile as a commuter vehicle was an integral fixture in the neighborhood.

While homes were still being erected during the 1930s throughout the older sections of the neighborhood, the pace was considerably slower than during the 1920s. By the end of the 1920s, approximately two-thirds of the neighborhood was developed. The only direction in which it was possible to expand was north. Woodruff Place and Lela Avenue, which connected Woodruff Place to Walnut Avenue and Lakewood Street, were platted in 1932. In the midst of the Great Depression, activity was not as brisk on Woodruff Avenue as in the earlier sections. In fact, the earliest houses on Woodruff Place were not built until 1939. Most of the houses there date from the early 1940s. Since that time, fewer numbers of structures have been erected throughout the neighborhood, and virtually all of them have been built on lots previously undeveloped.

Wesley Heights reflects the middle class values and means during the 1920s. The architecture is popular rather than academic, and the character is strictly community-oriented and non-commercial. Earlier suburbs in Charlotte included planned areas for commercial activity, to provide basic services to the residents, but Wesley Heights did not. Even the lots that accessed the thoroughfares (W. Trade Street, Tuckaseegee Road and W. Morehead Street), faced out of the neighborhood, and are today not considered to be a part of it. Wesley Heights was insular in a way that no other neighborhood in Charlotte had ever been.

A significant change occurred in the neighborhood during the late 1960s. A sudden shift in population resulted in the virtual overnight transformation from residents strictly of the white race to primarily African-Americans. This came on the heels of the wholesale destruction of the African-American neighborhood of Brooklyn (in Charlotte's Second Ward) due to an urban renewal program. It is possible that plans for the impending construction of Interstate 77 at the edge of the neighborhood caused the original residents to offer their homes for sale. In any event, once the transformation was underway, it was widespread and rapid. A reflection of this was seen in the transfer of the two church properties from Episcopal to Baptist and from Methodist Episcopal to African Methodist Episcopal. The Wesley Heights Methodist Episcopal Church at 201 Grandin Road (no. 11) is now the Greater Bethel African Methodist Episcopal Church, and St. Andrew's Episcopal Church at 615 Grandin Road (no. 61) is now St. Mark's Baptist Church.

Remarkably few homes have been removed from the interior of the neighborhood. The public school at the northwest corner of S. Summit Avenue and W. 4th Street, was demolished in the early 1970s, and several houses were taken for Interstate 77, which was constructed along the eastern edge of the neighborhood. Additionally, West 3rd Street, which was called Westbrook Drive for a time during the 1950s, was widened and resulted in the destruction of eleven properties. It was renamed again, and is now called W. 4th Street Extension. Despite these changes, the neighborhood closely resembles its appearance of sixty years ago in character, materials and scale.

Architectural Context

Wesley Heights is one of a string of early suburbs circling Charlotte, it has its own character and identity stemming largely from the times and circumstances of its inception. It is unique because it is the only such suburb dating primarily from the boom years of the 1920s. The other neighborhoods in Charlotte were already in place by that time, and relied, out of necessity, on the proximity of public transportation.

Wesley Heights, on the other hand, was developed after commuting by automobile had pervaded everyday life.

The architecture in Wesley Heights exhibits a narrow range of types and styles. It is far more homogeneous than Dilworth, Elizabeth, or virtually any other early suburb in Charlotte. The majority of homes are built during the 1920s are Craftsman/Bungalow style, while the 1930s ushered in a diluted version of the Tudor Revival. The Colonial Revival style is represented throughout both decades, but not in large numbers.

Despite the fact that the majority of houses in Wesley Heights were built following published plans, there is a tremendous variety in design along the streetscape. Each house is unique, though many elements (weatherboard or brick veneer, gable roofs, porches, paired windows, etc.) are repeated throughout the neighborhood. It is this repetition of materials, scale and design that gives the neighborhood such a high degree of cohesiveness. By contrast, the earlier Charlotte suburbs had longer periods of development and therefore include a greater mix of architectural types and styles than Wesley Heights does. The Elizabeth National Register Historic District, for example, was the product of five separate subdivisions, and grew up over four decades.

The grandest house in the neighborhood, the George Wadsworth house at 400 S. Summit Avenue (no. 123), is also the earliest. It was designed by renowned Charlotte architect Louis Asbury and built in 1911. Also drawn by Asbury in 1927 and 1928 were the Wesley Heights Methodist Episcopal Church (no. 11) and the Catawba Apartments (no. 2). The Catawba is the largest (twelve units in three stories) multi-family dwelling in the neighborhood, and, standing near the junction of W. Trade Street, serves as an anchor for Grandin Road. The other apartment building in the neighborhood, the Bomar Apartments at 305 S. Summit Avenue (no. 112), was designed and built by the Graham Brothers in 1928. St. Andrew's Episcopal Church at 615 Grandin Road (no. 61) was designed by prominent Charlotte architect William H. Peeps.

On a smaller scale, Fred L. Bonfoey, a Charlotte architect known for designing bungalows, had some commissions in Wesley Heights. Among them is the Severs House at 321 Grandin Road (no. 30), which he designed in 1924. B. W. Roberts and J. R. Thrower were the architects of record at 409 Grandin Road (no. 38) and 630 Grandin Road (no. 69) respectively.

VERBAL BOUNDARY DESCRIPTION

The boundaries of the Wesley Heights Historic District include the following:

- a) both sides of Grandin Road; 100, 200, 300, 400, 500, 600, 700 and 800 blocks
- b) both sides of Heathcliff Street; 400 block
- c) both sides of Lela Avenue, 1600 block
- d) both sides of S. Summit Avenue; 100, 200, 300, 400, 500, 600, 700 and 800 blocks
- e) both sides of Walnut Avenue; 300, 400, 500, 600, 700, 800 and 900 blocks
- f) both sides of Woodruff Place; 600, 700 and 800 blocks
- g) both sides of W. 2nd Street; 1300, 1400 and 1500 block
- h) both sides of W. 4th Street; 1300, 1400 and 1500 block
- i) both sides of W. 4th Street Extension; 1300, 1400, 1500 and 1600 blocks

The boundaries encompass all of Lela Avenue, Heathcliff Place and those portions of Grandin Road, S. Summit Avenue and Walnut Avenue which lie in between Tuckaseegee Road and W. Trade Street on the north and W. Morehead Street and Freedom Drive on the south. Additionally, the boundaries include those portions of W. 2nd Street, W. 4th Street and W. 4th Street Extension which lie in between I-77 on the east and the intersection of Tuckaseegee Road with the CSX Railroad tracks on the west side of the district.

BOUNDARY JUSTIFICATION

The boundaries are based on the survey plats of 1911 (revised in 1921), 1925 and 1932. While the old survey plats include lots facing W. Trade Street, Tuckaseegee Road and W. Morehead Street (a portion of which is now called Freedom Drive), they are not included in the historic district. This is based on five factors:

- a) none of the aforementioned lots face into the neighborhood
- b) none of the aforementioned lots are strictly residential in character or use
- c) lots on W. Trade Street and Tuckaseegee Road face away from the neighborhood and are oriented toward the Seversville neighborhood. They are considered by residents of both neighborhoods to be a part of Seversville
- d) lots on W. Morehead Street and Freedom Drive are commercial/industrial. They are not considered by residents to be a part of Wesley Heights
- e) lots on W. Morehead Street and Freedom Drive are visually separated from residential Wesley Heights by undeveloped land which acts as a buffer between the residential neighborhood and the commercial/industrial areas
- f) W. Trade Street, Tuckaseegee Road, W. Morehead Street and Freedom Drive are all major thoroughfares and are not in accord with the residential nature of the neighborhood.

The Wesley Heights neighborhood is strictly residential in character. The only exceptions to this are the two churches on Grandin Road. They both were planned as an integral part of the community, and both continue to serve the residents there today.
